on the chest of Duhshasana, would tear him to pieces and drink his blood. But the very next moment when he pronounced the concluding portion of his motto "in that simple way" in a very soft and low tone, the entire meaning of his words changed to the exact opposite of what appeared to be his meaning at first, like the "Ashaththhama hata, iti Gaga" story of the Mahabharata.

1 shall make mention of one or two other lunatics, whom I consider worth mentioning in this connection, and leaving the topic pass on to something else:—I noticed a very peculiar characteristic amongst the illiterate and uneducated lunatics whom I came across there, inasmuch as they appeared to work and talk quite like sensible men in many respects, but with this difference that they seemed to be always fighting in their own minds some unknown enemy of theirs, threatening and abusing him in the very foulest and the most vulgar language that it was possible for them to make use of, satisfying themselves in this most peculiar way, for want of any better, in return for the injuries done to them by their
